Across the Black Waters is a novel by Mulk Raj Anand that explores the complexities of the Indian partition and its impact on the lives of ordinary people.

The novel follows the story of Lalu, a young Sikh boy who is separated from his family during the partition of India. Lalu must find his way back home, and along the way he encounters a variety of characters who help and hinder him. Through his journey, Lalu learns about the different perspectives on the partition and the human cost of violence.

Anand's novel is a powerful and moving account of the human cost of partition. It is a story of loss, hope, courage, resilience, and the search for home.

Lalu's Journey

Lalu's journey begins in the village of his birth, where he lives with his family and friends. When the partition of India occurs, Lala and his family are forced to flee their village. They travel to the city of Lahore, where they hope to find safety. However, Lahore is a dangerous place for Sikhs, and Lala is soon separated from his family.

Lala wanders the streets of Lahore, lost and alone. He is befriended by a group of children who are also displaced by the partition, and together they try to survive. Lala and his friends face many challenges during their journey. They are hunted by both the police and the rioters, and they often go hungry and cold. However, they never give up hope.

Lala's journey is a microcosm of the partition of India. It is a story of loss, hope, courage, and resilience. Lala's story is a reminder of the human cost of violence and the importance of peace and reconciliation.
