In the annals of true crime, there are few figures as enigmatic and alluring as Geissinger. A woman of striking beauty and intelligence, she was also a cold-blooded killer who preyed on young men in the early 1900s.

Geissinger's true identity remains unknown, but she is believed to have been born in Germany in the late 1800s. She was a well-educated woman, fluent in several languages, and had a keen interest in the arts and sciences.

In her early twenties, Geissinger moved to the United States, where she began to work as a governess and tutor. She quickly gained a reputation for being a skilled teacher, but she also had a dark side that would soon emerge. In 1902, Geissinger was arrested for the murder of a young man named Henry Miller. Miller had been a student of hers, and Geissinger had allegedly become obsessed with him. After Miller rejected her advances, she killed him in a fit of rage.

Geissinger's arrest shocked the community, and she quickly became a media sensation. The press dubbed her the "Beautiful Murderess," and her trial was covered extensively in newspapers and magazines.

During her trial, Geissinger displayed a remarkable degree of composure and intelligence. She defended herself against the charges, claiming that she had acted in self-defense. However, the jury did not believe her, and she was found guilty of murder.

Geissinger was sentenced to death, but her sentence was later commuted to life in prison. She served the rest of her days in the Matteawan State Hospital for the Criminally Insane, where she died in 1929.

Geissinger's story is a cautionary tale about the dangers of obsession and the power of a beautiful facade. She was a woman of extraordinary intelligence and beauty, but she also had a dark side that ultimately led to her downfall.

The Victims of Geissinger

Geissinger is believed to have killed at least three young men, but her true number of victims may never be known. Her known victims include:

 Henry Miller: A young man who was a student of Geissinger's. He was killed in 1902.

- Joseph Weber: A young man who was friends with Miller. He was killed in 1903.
- Jacob Prager: A young man who was a neighbor of Geissinger's. He was killed in 1904.

Geissinger's victims were all young men who were between the ages of 18 and 25. They were all described as being handsome and intelligent, and they all came from wealthy families.

Geissinger's motive for killing her victims is unknown, but it is believed that she was driven by a combination of jealousy, obsession, and greed.
