Wallace says that he first started talking to trees when he was a child. He would sit under a tree and talk to it about his problems. He says that the trees would listen to him and offer him advice.

As Wallace got older, he began to realize that he could talk to all trees, not just the one in his backyard. He says that he can hear the trees talking to him, and he can understand what they are saying.

Wallace says that the trees have taught him a lot about life. He says that they have taught him about the importance of patience, compassion, and forgiveness. He says that they have also taught him about the interconnectedness of all living things.

Wallace's claims have been met with skepticism by some people. However, there are also many people who believe that he is genuine. Wallace says that he does not care what other people think. He says that he is simply sharing his experiences with the world.
